Core Values of the Lenkeson Global Christian University School of Applied Health Studies

Healthcare students need professional development to be members of the leadership team, to increase their knowledge, to make reforms to promote public health, and to be a significant actor in improving patient outcomes.

Being honest with members of the multidisciplinary team, patients, and oneself is what trustworthiness entails. Healthcare is viewed as the most honest profession, and high standards of patient care should be maintained.

Individual variations have little bearing on the quality of education and patient care delivered by nurses, healthcare administrators, students, or instructors.

Holistic care guarantees that patients get the best possible treatment by treating concerns of the mind, body, and spirit. Interprofessional collaboration among members of the healthcare team is required for the following:

- Self-accountability: Individuals gain and retain the skills and knowledge necessary to provide safe care while remaining minimally competent.
- Commitment to Service: Community outreach activities aimed at enhancing the health of the community and its individuals are referred to as service. LGCU is a Christ-centered institution that provides more than just academic and professional growth. Individuals are given the tools they need to become community leaders.

Scholarship entails identifying information that may be applied to healthcare professionals via evidence-based practice.
